James Bond and Chris Rowsom (Director of Historic Ships) met with John Griffin last week. John liked the project and what it might bring to the City as better Open Space on Pier 1. To date, we have raised $2,543,000. $1.84MM is part of a $2MM federal earmark that LCF brought to the City. City has told us that we have until December 31st to raise the required funding or we will lose our federal earmark. Project will among other things : Rejuvenate Pier 1 with new exhibits and activities; provide enhanced educational experience for school children and tourists; provide museum-caliber exhibition space with a green roof; provide a vast improvement to the Inner Harbor landscape and allow visitors to walk around the building and get close to the ship. In order to get this project off the ground we need to secure $1MM ASAP. Would be great to see how State can support this request. Let me know what I can do to move this along. Thanks

Buddy says he spoke with you and you said that it was I that was inattentive and unappreciative of Perdue. In your email to me you said it was the Secretary of Agriculture who was falling down and not performing compared to others. Which is it, or is it your perception that neither of is properly attentive, present, appreciative or responsive?

We have raised $2,543,000. $1.84MM is part of a $2MM federal earmark. $160K of which city has used for the new water taxi docks. Also a LCF trustee has pledged $500K if we secure the $1M.

We were working with [REDACTED] until they lost interest when state rfp went out. And stopped talking to us. Then we reached out to [REDACTED] and are currently trying to work with them. We are offering to put facility on perdue property and buy the steam to run soybean refinery and source the litter/biomass. I will tell you that the ag community is still generally against the project but we are willing to give it go. I don't know where you get your info but I would be interested in knowing.

We are busting our butts on this. Jim Perdue gave us green light. He was in 1st meeting w [REDACTED] seemed to get cold feet when rfp went out - either they didn't want to do project via rfp or they don't think they need project anymore.

With proposals due at end of month time is short but let me know if there is anything else we can be doing. [REDACTED] seemed likely choice when [REDACTED] dropped out. I am happy to go back to [REDACTED] and see where they are if you like.

Hey. Same subject and recognizing there is no deal. But we are talking to pretty regularly and visiting Perdue next week. If there were a litter-to-energy project would that state be more inclined to support a smaller say 10mw project or a fibrowatt type 55mw project. We continue to feel larger project has issues but are willing to roll up sleeves and see what can be done if larger project has legs.

Hey, I could see why -- for many reasons -- it could be something you'd want to partner in bringing about. Regardless of the merger. I think something like this, or , or anything that reduces Ag impact on water and groundwater would be great. Maybe the state buys the energy on a long term basis. Maybe the state partners w/ someone who can build and run it. There are a lot of good possibilities that could make it work.

Hypothetically, poultry waste to energy could be a good long term hedge, with positive short term environmental benefits. We are looking at their hi/low assumptions. I'm concerned that even if every drop of droppings on the lower shore went into energy production, growers/farmers would replace it with store bought fertilizer thereby wiping out waste to energy gains/reductions.

Don't have DPI info handy but from what I remember the industry has concerns about bill for a number of reasons:

Not enough time to study, FibroWatt just met w/DPI last week or so.

The amount of electricity that they would be required to produce under the bill would take close to 500,000 tons of litter - which is more than is believed to be in Maryland. Litter would then need to be sourced from Delaware and possibly Virginia.

Likely may also need to burn wood. If they burn wood along with litter could raise price for wood bedding which we use in houses.

Bill favors one solution over other users of litter.

Takes litter (a valuable fertilizer) away from row crop farmers.

Depending on final wording, this bill may establish a statutory finding that poultry litter adds nutrient pollution to the Chesapeake Bay. There is no such finding for other sources of nutrients and sediment.

This will represent a large Maryland taxpayer subsidy. Concern that when that is figured out it is possible poultry industry will be held accountable for added expense to taxpayers.

The key nutrient issue, Phosphorous, remains in the ash and still must be disposed of.

This may diminish the value of litter to poultry growers. Fibrowatt claims that Maryland's Nutrient Credit Trading system will make up this difference. This is unknown.

Mr. Satterfield,

Thank you for your email. The quote is accurate in its wording, although taken slightly out of context. My comments to the reporter focused on the eventual need for chicken waste to be a factor in a larger formula to meet the EPA's mandated maximum daily loads. As you know, poultry waste management is one of a number of factors that the EPA allows states to consider in formulating their plan to meet the minimum standards. In response to a question from the reporter: "Does the Governor believe that the large chicken producers hold more responsibility than the smaller farmers?" – My response appears below, that everyone needs to work together, because that's the only way we'll come to a manageable solution.

Farmers want 'Big Chicken' held responsible

Posted: 7:46 pm Thu, July 29, 2010

By Nicholas Sohr
Daily Record Business Writer

Farmer David Smith said he signed the Environment Maryland petition because contract chicken growers on the Eastern Shore are treated unfairly by the large producers.

Environmentalists and farmers want "Big Chicken" to pay.

Fifty-five farmers signed a petition sent to Gov. Martin O'Malley on Thursday, asking him to hold large poultry producers responsible for pollution from chicken houses seeping into the Chesapeake Bay.

The petition circulated by Environment Maryland says companies like Salisbury-based Perdue Inc. and Tyson Foods Inc. keep their prices low and market share large by leaving the costs of cleaning up poultry industry pollution to taxpayers and individual farm owners paid to raise the chickens.

An O'Malley spokesman said large poultry companies could find themselves held responsible for some of the farm pollution when the state builds its comprehensive plan for dealing with runoff into the bay. The Environmental Protection Agency will finalize the plan later this year, laying out pollution limits for the bay's watershed.

"I think there's certainly a need from everybody in the industry and on the regulatory side to work together," said Shaun Adamec, O'Malley's press secretary. "It certainly doesn't do anybody any good for poultry farmers to say we own the chickens, but not the manure they produce."

Perdue and Tyson executives deflected the criticism in the petition, and touted their own environmental records.

"We've partnered with EPA through the historic Clean Waters Environmental Initiative to work with the farm families who grow our chickens to help ensure environmental compliance of their poultry operations," said Steve Schwalb, Perdue's vice president of environmental sustainability.

A Tyson spokeswoman called the petition "a cheap shot."

"This group appears to be comprised of small organic farms that compete with Tyson and other larger companies to provide meat products to consumers," said Libby Lawson.

David Smith raises cows, chickens, pigs and lambs in open fields rather than crowded barns on Springfield Farm in Sparks. He said he signed the petition because contract chicken growers on the Eastern Shore are treated unfairly by the large producers.

"I couldn't possibly feed the masses where I'm operating, but there's a middle ground to be found between the way I do it and the way the big integrators do it," he said.

Maryland was the eighth-largest chicken producing state in 2008, with nearly 300 million birds, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Delaware, part of which also falls in the Chesapeake Bay watershed, was ninth, with 243 million.

Thursday's petition riled state Sen. Richard F. Colburn, R-Middle Shore, who said it unfairly singled out the Eastern Shore and piles on to an industry already facing heavy regulation.

Environment Maryland, in its petition, argues 17 percent of the nitrogen and 26 percent of the phosphorus polluting the bay comes from animal manure. But according to the EPA, just a small slice of that originates on the Eastern Shore.

In a draft of the pollution limits budget, the EPA allows 39 million pounds of nitrogen per year to come from Maryland, less than 20 percent of the total.

The Eastern Shore will be allotted about one-quarter of Maryland's nitrogen pollution.

More than 75 percent of the nitrogen in the bay will come from Pennsylvania (76.8 million pounds) and Virginia (54.4 million pounds).

"Eventually, if you continue to vilify the Delmarva poultry industry, they're going to move to areas that are more business friendly, like North Carolina and Virginia," Colburn said. "The best play to reduce pollution is a comprehensive plan that works with the poultry industry."

Notwithstanding Mr. Satterfield's fears, I have intention of re-visiting "co-permitting" and appreciate your willingness to work together to achieve Maryland's tmdl goals.

Mr. Satterfield,

Thank you for your email. The quote is accurate in its wording, although taken slightly out of context. My comments to the reporter focused on the eventual need for chicken waste to be a factor in a larger formula to meet the EPA's mandated maximum daily loads. As you know, poultry waste management is one of a number of factors that the EPA allows states to consider in formulating their plan to meet the minimum standards. In response to a question from the reporter: "Does the Governor believe that the large chicken producers hold more responsibility than the smaller farmers?" – My response appears below, that everyone needs to work together, because that's the only way we'll come to a manageable solution.

Farmers want 'Big Chicken' held responsible

Posted: 7:46 pm Thu, July 29, 2010
By Nicholas Sohr
Daily Record Business Writer

Farmer David Smith said he signed the Environment Maryland petition because contract chicken growers on the Eastern Shore are treated unfairly by the large producers.

Environmentalists and farmers want "Big Chicken" to pay.

Fifty-five farmers signed a petition sent to Gov. Martin O'Malley on Thursday, asking him to hold large poultry producers responsible for pollution from chicken houses seeping into the Chesapeake Bay.

The petition circulated by Environment Maryland says companies like Salisbury-based Perdue Inc. and Tyson Foods Inc. keep their prices low and market share large by leaving the costs of cleaning up poultry industry pollution to taxpayers and individual farm owners paid to raise the chickens.

An O'Malley spokesman said large poultry companies could find themselves held responsible for some of the farm pollution when the state builds its comprehensive plan for dealing with runoff into the bay. The Environmental Protection Agency will finalize the plan later this year, laying out pollution limits for the bay's watershed.

"I think there's certainly a need from everybody in the industry and on the regulatory side to work together," said Shaun Adamec, O'Malley's press secretary. "It certainly doesn't do anybody any good for poultry farmers to say we own the chickens, but not the manure they produce."

Perdue and Tyson executives deflected the criticism in the petition, and touted their own environmental records.

"We've partnered with EPA through the historic Clean Waters Environmental Initiative to work with the farm families who grow our chickens to help ensure environmental compliance of their poultry operations," said Steve Schwalb, Perdue's vice president of environmental sustainability.

A Tyson spokeswoman called the petition "a cheap shot."

"This group appears to be comprised of small organic farms that compete with Tyson and other larger companies to provide meat products to consumers," said Libby Lawson.

David Smith raises cows, chickens, pigs and lambs in open fields rather than crowded barns on Springfield Farm in Sparks. He said he signed the petition because contract chicken growers on the Eastern Shore are treated unfairly by the large producers.

"I couldn't possibly feed the masses where I'm operating, but there's a middle ground to be found between the way I do it and the way the big integrators do it," he said.

Maryland was the eighth-largest chicken producing state in 2008, with nearly 300 million birds, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Delaware, part of which also falls in the Chesapeake Bay watershed, was ninth, with 243 million.

Thursday's petition riled state Sen. Richard F. Colburn, R-Middle Shore, who said it unfairly singled out the Eastern Shore and piles on to an industry already facing heavy regulation.

Environment Maryland, in its petition, argues 17 percent of the nitrogen and 26 percent of the phosphorus polluting the bay comes from animal manure. But according to the EPA, just a small slice of that originates on the Eastern Shore.

In a draft of the pollution limits budget, the EPA allows 39 million pounds of nitrogen per year to come from Maryland, less than 20 percent of the total.

The Eastern Shore will be allotted about one-quarter of Maryland's nitrogen pollution.

More than 75 percent of the nitrogen in the bay will come from Pennsylvania (76.8 million pounds) and Virginia (54.4 million pounds).

"Eventually, if you continue to vilify the Delmarva poultry industry, they're going to move to areas that are more business friendly, like North Carolina and Virginia," Colburn said. "The best play to reduce pollution is a comprehensive plan that works with the poultry industry."

Martin. Hi. Was trying to have a vacation but was read in on the articles in response to Enviro MD petition. Big news on shore. I assume your press secretary speaks for you but we were surprised. Is this your current position? Its certainly your right to think this way-just let us know. I cut and paste a few excerpts from today's papers.

- "It certainly doesn't do anybody any good for poultry farmers to say we own the chickens, but not the manure they produce."

-"I think Environment Maryland and [those] farmers are in agreement with the governor's and president's policies," - "I think it's good that Environment Maryland is keeping the pressure on."

-"Perdue is a massive company, and the chicken waste has to be dealt with,"

-An O'Malley spokesman said large poultry companies could find themselves held responsible for some of the farm pollution when the state builds its comprehensive plan for dealing with runoff into the bay.

James Bond and Chris Rowsom (Director of Historic Ships) met with John Griffin last week. John liked the project and what it might bring to the City as better Open Space on Pier 1. To date, we have raised $2,543,000. $1.84MM is part of a $2MM federal earmark that LCF brought to the City. City has told us that we have until December 31st to raise the required funding or we will lose our federal earmark. Project will among other things : Rejuvenate Pier 1 with new exhibits and activities; provide enhanced educational experience for school children and tourists; provide museum-caliber exhibition space with a green roof; provide a vast improvement to the Inner Harbor landscape and allow visitors to walk around the building and get close to the ship. In order to get this project off the ground we need to secure $1MM ASAP. Would be great to see how State can support this request. Let me know what I can do to move this along. Thanks

The Honorable Martin O'Malley
Governor, State of Maryland
100 State Circle
Annapolis, MD 21401-1925

Dear Governor O'Malley:

As you know I am a member of the Living Classrooms (LCF) Board of Trustees and the Chairman of the Historic Ships in Baltimore (HSB) Advisory Board. HSB is an affiliate of LCF.

Since joining the LCF Board I have been working with LCF and the staff of HSB to replace the Pier 1 building next to USS Constellation with a structure that will provide a better educational experience for the thousands of school children and tourists who visit the ship each year as well as necessary amenities like adequate restrooms and climate control for the HSB collection on display.

The total cost of this project is estimated at $4,115,620. To date, we have raised $2,543,000. $1.84MM of this amount is part of a $2MM federal earmark that LCF brought to the City. The City used $160K of this amount for the new water taxi docks in Fells Point. City funding of $589K is available for the project through BDC and GO Bonds. Maryland Historical Trust and Maryland Heritage Areas have provided exhibit design funding. Approximately $1,572,620 still needs to be raised. We have recently received an individual pledge of $500K – the stipulation being that we secure a 2:1 match. The $1MM request that is the subject of this letter would meet the requirements for this match and allow this project to move forward.

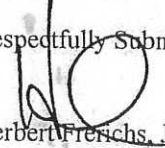

After discussions with your Chief of Staff, Matt Gallagher, James Bond and Chris Rowsom (Director of Historic Ships) met with DNR Secretary John Griffin to introduce him to the Pier 1 project and explore the funding possibilities at DNR. John liked the project and what it might bring to the City in terms of a rejuvenated open space on Pier 1.

The City has told us that we have until December 31st of this year to raise the required funding or we will lose our federal earmark. In order to get this project off the ground we need to secure or have as a pledge $1MM. The project is already moving forward through the approval process with State Highways, has been vetted through Baltimore City's Urban Design Architectural Review Panel and is shovel ready.

We hope that you will consider State support for this very worthwhile project. The new building will revitalize Pier 1, honor the thousands who served aboard USS Constellation, be a gateway to the rest of the Historic Ships fleet and Baltimore's Maritime Harbor, and most importantly provide the thousands of school children and visitors who come aboard each year with an enhanced educational experience.

Thank you very much for your consideration.

Respectfully Submitted,

Herbert Frerichs, Jr.
